The following item gleaned from the Randolph Herald and News, will be of interest to many Barre people: "A. M. Morrison of Barre and Ben A. Reed of Williamstown were in town Friday, trying to recover horses on which they have claims and which were sold by Philip Lowell as unencumbered property. Morrison attempted to take a pair in the possession of Fred Dudley Smith, but there being some flaw in Morrison's title, Smith retained them by writ of replevin. Ben Adams of Chelsea appeared yesterday in pursuit of horses in which he is interested but derived no more satisfaction from the investigation than others quite as badly 'stung.' So many claims are being brought forward, dating back a year or two, that the baby's wooden rocking horse begins to look like a debatable piece of property."

Mr. Lowell still remains in deep seclusion; while more and more of his victims take a hand in the merry game of cat's cradle he left behind him.
